Besides agriculture, which is the main economic activity, in the rural space many other economic and not agricultural activities take place as well, and they are punctual or on limited areas. The Romanian village – by its ethno cultural and ethnographical specific, by the originality and the richness of the resources which are typical to this geographical environment – it can turn into a new special tourist product which can satisfy a large area of motivation in the organized and not organized tourism. Agrotourism and the rural tourism creates main motivations in the training and development of some traditional activities which have been neglected lately as for instance the craftsmanship – activity which stirs up the local economical and social life. The rural economy is the more developed, end dynamic, the more it has a more diverse structure, and the weight of nonagricultural activities is bigger.
