The total capitalization of the human resource factor of any farm unit is, mainly a matter of a quantitative and qualitative nature in terms of necessary labour resources. This paper intends to analyse both the level, as well as the evolution of labour productivity of a farm unit nearby the town of Iași. Taking into account both the evolution of the average production of three consecutive years, as well as the labour force consumption, we have managed to calculate the annual average productivity and the turnover indicator per employee, thus trying to identify the main factors of influence. We have also reached a series of conclusions and recommendations aiming at enhancing labour productivity, under the conditions of swapping production processes.
