

Ecological agriculture in Romania - a real chance for rural economies

Manuela-Dora ORBOI - USAMVB Timișoara

In light of Romania's accession to the European Union, ecological agriculture is considered a new and very dynamic economic sector. At the same time, it is part of the sustainable agricultural and rural development process, compatible with the new model of European agriculture, one of Romania's efforts to align to the current quality standards in agriculture imposed by the European Union. Ecological agriculture is a real chance for rural economies, a contribution to their sustainable development with improved labour force employment in agriculture, processing and services. This is to the advantage of the rural communities and their economic and social consistency process.