

The need of the state support for agricultural producers

T. IANCU, I. BRAD, Cosmina-Simona TOADER - USAMVB Timișoara

The agricultural producer is confronting with a series of shortcomings that in many cases it leads to its own inefficiency. For example: price fluctuation of agroalimentary foodstuff directly influences its capacity of restarting the production cycle, low incomes obtained by the agricultural production in comparison with other productive sectors of the economy, the lack of financial resources for investments and production, low economic power of agricultural exploitations, the competition of imported agroalimentary foodstuff that in many cases are of superior quality, etc. That is why, the state through its policies applied at the level of macro and micro economy, should participate at stopping its decline and at helping agriculture to recover from its decline and at supporting agricultural producer in a such a way that he could carry on his production activities efficiently.