

The implications of agrotourism in developing the rural area in the west part of the country

T. IANCU, I. BRAD, Cosmina-Simona TOADER - USAMVB Timișoara

The West part of the country has a high agrotouristic potential due to its natural, material, human and spiritual elements encountered. The development of the agrotourism in this part of the country, leads to creating new places for work, to obtaining of some supplementary incomes for the population from the rural area, to a superior capitalization of the surplus from their households, etc. Agrotourism represents an alternative for agricultural problems from that area, a way of reviving its complementary activities, a way of attracting investors in the tourism industry, in other words a chance for financial reviving of the West part rural area. Still, the development of this kind of activity depends on infrastructure, living conditions sometimes modest and insufficient level of education, etc.