

The management integration of Romanian tourism in the European Union

Aurica GRIGORE, Cornelia-Elena TUREAC, Anca-Gabriela TURTUREANU - "Dunărea de Jos"
University of Galați

Romania's accession to the European Union is a complex process that involves essential mutations in terms of design and developing the activity in all the social life domains, economic and political of Romania. The essence of these transformations lies in improving the activity in all sectors, being necessary a new model of organization, management and control, based on principles and economical-managerial modern mechanisms, adapted to the realities of the period through which we cross, in accordance with the requirements of the EU economy. The tourism evolution in the last decades has gradually transformed and in increasingly large measures this activity from a alternative of spending the free time in a complex industry, with economic and social effects clearly outlined on the human community.